

MediBuddy launches new vertical of phlebotomists

19 January 2022 | News

Plans to expand comprehensive healthcare services across 100 cities

MediBuddy has launched its team of phlebotomy. The digital healthcare platform would now offer customers comprehensive healthcare services that would now include the provision of conducting various medical tests at home with its in-house team of Phlebos, along with doctor consultations and medicine delivery.

With this new service launch, MediBuddy sets a target to strengthen its team of certified phlebotomists of over 1000 plus members within the next quarter for consumers to avail lab tests from the comfort of their homes across cities and small towns.

Customers can book an appointment through the MediBuddy platform based on their requirements. Upon confirmation, a qualified phlebotomist will reach their location to conduct the tests. The app will send an OTP for verification, following which the phlebotomist will walk you through the entire process.

Once the explanation is done, a medical checkup will be conducted recording all customer vitals. Post which the samples will be collected adhering to all safety protocols, ensuring that all equipment used is sterilized and safe.

Maintaining transparency in all processes, the customers can easily track all activities on the platform. As soon as the results arrive from the lab, the customer will be notified.