Noida-based health startup FirstCure Health raises $350K

11 May 2022 | News

The startup plans to expand its presence strongly in North India and enter the Southern region of India by the end of the year

Noida-based healthcare startup FirstCure Health recently raised $350K in the Pre-Seed funding round. The round has seen participation from various angel investors.

The startup recently launched a healthcare service network. With mentorship from his family of senior reputed doctors and entrepreneurs, founded by Nikhil Bansal (a Chartered Accountant and alumnus of Harvard Business School), the startup aims to make modern surgical care safe, seamless, accessible and affordable.

The funding will enable FirstCure to expand deeply into the segment of healthcare service offerings, both in terms of geography and operations. Further, with the commitment of another $300 K in the next six months, the startup plans to expand its presence strongly in North India and enter the Southern region of India by the end of the year.
