HempStreet aims to build solutions to help them in their fight against mass ailments

New Delhi-based startup HempStreet has partnered with Amrita School of Ayurveda. Through this collaboration, HempStreet aims to receive clinically supported solutions to aid in their fight against mass ailments.

HempStreet's partnership with Amrita School of Ayurveda is one step further to meet the nation's needs of managing ailments through modern Ayurveda.

Abhishek Mohan, Founder & CEO, HempStreet, said, "With this partnership, we strive to further our mission to harness the power of Ayurveda via cannabis-based medication with a layer of clinical validation. This fits our global strategy of best-in-class partnerships across Europe, the US and Israel."

Dr P Ram Manohar, Head, Centre for Advanced Research In Ayurveda (ACARA), said, "Our goal is to promote the expansion and advancement of Ayurvedic education, and working with HempStreet will help us close the knowledge gap between cutting-edge technological advancements and traditional medicine based on ancient wisdom."
