Gurugram-based health & wellness startup Shyft has announced the launch of its new women's health focused brand - Dash Health. It will serve as a health, wellness, and lifestyle management brand dedicated towards improving women's health with a mission to improve awareness, create community support, and offer lifestyle management services targeted towards different health conditions.

The launch reinforces the company's commitment towards offering focused & impactful solutions for PCOS management, menstrual & hormonal health, natal care, and menopause. The expert-led services across nutrition, fitness & yoga, therapy and more are designed to complement and work in tandem with clinical & medical services that the customer may already be availing, to drive positive health outcomes.

Having catered to over 30,000 women customers over the past two and a half years, Shyft has an in-depth understanding of the gaps in women's health related services, and established proven solutions to drive positive health outcomes. As a dedicated platform for women's health, Dash Health will now focus on making women more aware about their health - not just the problems, but also the solutions.

The platform will also curate and share credible resources related to members' health conditions, and offer access to experts who can address any questions or concerns raised by members. Dash Health will also expand its services portfolio with dedicated therapy and dermatology consultations for concerns across various life stages.
