New Delhi-based health tech startup DocOsage secures funding to enhance product development

24 January 2024 | News

Innovative use of AI for personalised health insights, and future integration of tele-health and genetic testing for holistic care

New Delhi-based startup DocOsage, an artificial intelligence (AI)-powered health platform providing comprehensive solutions for health needs, has successfully raised pre-seed funding led by Dr Mayur Agarwal, an Angel Investor. The funds will be utilised to enhance product development, refine Core-AI capabilities for health insights, and conduct early-stage testing for the telehealth and genetic studies platform.

Founded in October 2023, DocOsage stands as a pioneering lifelong health companion app, revolutionising healthcare in India with a holistic approach to individual and family well-being. The company facilitates the creation of specialised healthcare communities, fostering collaboration among providers for improved treatment plans and national uplift.

Varun Vashisthaa, Co-founder and CEO, Doc0Sage said, "The initial funding will serve as a catalyst for launching product development, paving the way for a revolutionary health platform." DocOsage is unwavering in its commitment to shaping the future of proactive healthcare.

As the brand gears up for its next phase of growth, the startup is focused on product refinement through iterative development based on early user feedback, strategic partnerships by exploring collaborations with hospitals, clinics, insurance companies, and incorporating tech advancements to enhance product features, and future capital infusion by preparing for subsequent rounds to scale and expand offerings.
